18. CO3 i) In the mid-1990s, at least one newspaper company, the now-defunct Knight-Ridder chain, created the prototype for a tablet newspaper that very much resembles the present-day iPad. A 1994 video titled “The Tablet Newspaper: A Vision for the Future” shows off the design of a futuristic newspaper designed at the Knight Ridder Information Design Lab in Boulder, Colorado. The video went viral in 2011 after it was posted on YouTube and numerous websites and blogs. The person behind the tablet vision, Roger Fidler, had even published an essay describing a tablet future as far back as 1981. The Knight-Ridder lab shared a wall with its neighbour Apple, with executives swapping ideas and visitors. The newspaper company, focused on content creation and not the hardware side, decided to not patent its tablet design and scrapped the project because screens took too much energy, and it was too expensive. 22. CO4 i) Martha Stewart-Ms Perfectionist", "Domestic doyenne" and a role model for any businesswoman, is the 'second' most written about woman in the world. This well-known entrepreneur of the United States, who turned the art of home-making and keeping into a billion dollar business - Martha Stewart Living Omnimedia Inc (MSO), encountered hard times when she was convicted in a scandal. She was convicted for her actions, which are considered to be less harmful in a corporate world that witnessed more serious scandals. Her case called for a rethinking of certain basic notions in free-market economies - ethics in business, the role of government regulation, and more importantly the perils and promises of personal branding. (9)

Coming from humble background, Martha Stewart owed her culinary and gardening skills to her parentage in a working-class family in New Jersey in the 1940s and 1950s. She was one of the first few women who entered the Wall Street in 1968 as a stockbroker with the New York Stock Exchange. She took to catering business in the 1970s, and honed her skills in keeping kitchen, arranging parties, designing interiors - the 'Martha Stewart way'. She made her way into publishing with her first book, Entertaining in 1982, and produced a variety of books, videotapes, CDs, and television specials. Martha launched her renowned magazine, Martha Stewart Living in collaboration with Time Warner, in 1990, and a television series by the same name, in 1993. Her regular appearance on television made her a household name in the US. The MSO expanded when it went public on the New York Stock Exchange in 1999. The enormous edifice of the company stood on four business segments. Publishing, Television, Merchandising, and Internet/Direct Commerce, with eight core content areas. Home, Cooking and Entertaining, Gardening, Crafts, Holiday, Weddings, Pet Keeping, and Baby and Kids. At 62, Martha states, "I am an individual, but I'm a business; Martha Stewart the individual has become Martha Stewart the brand."
